Occupational Therapy in Action – Fourth Year Student Exhibition

On Friday March 12, ninety two final year students worked in groups to create an exciting exhibition of occupational therapy for family, friends, staff and students and the clinical community to experience and explore. Exhibitors invited the wider community to learn the unique ways in which Occupational Therapists practice in a wide range of settings, each showcasing different day to day activities that people do, and love to do.

“Many spectators did not have much knowledge of occupational therapy, but through discussions with students and participating in the interactive exhibits, the participants were able to learn about the profession and its important role in promoting health and wellbeing through engagement in occupation” said Mr. Nick Maisey, fourth year student.

“Although all exhibition stalls were different, the passion for the profession was what underpinned each one. This same passion was what brought our year group onto the same page, with every single person proving their own unique contribution” said Honours student, Lauren Falconer.

The winning display was produced by Amy Rushton, Jane Ridge, Yvette Robert, Emily Reeve, Haylee Rakich.

The School of Occupational Therapy and Social Work plans to hold this event on an annual basis going forward. “The groundwork has now been set for the OT Exhibition to get bigger and better every year to share the value of occupational therapy with the world!” said Mr. Maisey.
